David Hume and Scepticism

This talk will analyze the skepticism of the 18th century Scottish philosopher David Hume in the framework of his Epistemology, Ethics and Philosophy of Religion. Hume's empiricism in Epistemology and his emotivism in Ethics will be evaluated in relation to his theory on religion and God with an emphasis on the limits of his scepticism.

His analysis of causality, impressions, ideas, passions and actions as well as his distinction between mathematical and factual reasoning will be summarized in connection to his criticism of metaphysics and theology.
